Another River · Lawrence Kramer

Somehow I carry this river, not Hudson or Susquehanna or Rhine or Loire, but the river that runs where it pleases, slopes, mists, is raining sheets, is pools, drops, gets moonstruck, lulls, wags with catkins, blooms, is banks of Trifolium (clover to you), is open on Sunday, is August eighth, is open vowels, is really the craziest thing; and when you stand near or, better, dip in and breast this flow with the flow of another river, the glisten of its days and ways (not mine) will come about your breast and face and cast your body in light and air. And there you can know yourself, sometimes, as you see yourself off.
